Marti DeGraaf and Toby Mack are collectors and students of art glass and elegant glassware, with a special passion for perfume bottles and particularly the products from the DeVilbiss Company, and their many glass company suppliers, during the first two-thirds of the 20th century. Their extensive collection of perfume bottles, records and other ephemera, along with records held by other collectors, plus research from company archives held at museums and universities, form the basis of this first comprehensive book devoted exclusively to DeVilbiss creations. Marti and Toby have been avid collectors of DeVilbiss and other perfume bottles and fine antiques for many years. They are frequent presenters at conferences and symposia on antiques and collecting, and are active in antique glassware and perfume bottle related organizations. Marti is past president of the International Perfume Bottle Association (IPBA) and Toby also served on IPBA's board.

A beautiful coffee table book or reference for the perfume collector! My husband and I went to the Cambridge City Glass Museum and saw some of the lovely bottles pictured in their displays. I wholeheartedly recommend the book and the museum. One of the volunteers at the museum told me about this book and showed me her copy. I had to have my own!

I am so glad that this book was written. The perfume bottles are beautiful to behold and the authors did an excellent job of photography.

Excellent quality publication. High quality photography and informative and descriptive prose. All in all a first class publication of its type. Any perfume bottle collector should be certain to own it.
