I much prefer Sky Terrain Maps but there isn't one available for the Santa Fe/Truchas Peak area. This is, however, a very good trail map. I've hiked many of the trails listed on this NatGeo map and only have one complaint. Their trail mileage markers fall short (by a mile or more). I thought it was a GPS issue but verified it with other hikers. A Google search revealed that others have noted this issue as well with NatGeo maps.

I love the Trails Illustrated maps. The right level of detail for me. Distances between junctions, basic topo, campgrounds.

Great map. Better than any other map out there.

Great map

I have not found a better map for this area. It covers the Sangre de Cristo mountain immediately north of Santa Fe with great detail (That would include a great part of the Pecos Wilderness). If you are planning on some hikes around Santa Fe, check this map.

The map stops south of Truchas peak. You can't name a map after a peak and then not include the peak on the map.
