Customer Reviews

I have worked in the business office of 2 nursing homes and also had a mother that had Alzheimer's and ended up in a nursing home and currently have a mother-in-law with alzheimer's in a nursing home. It takes a very special person to work in a nursing home and give the day to day care of someone's family. Thank you to all the wonderful nursing home care givers. You are all gems in my book! Diane you did an awesome job with your first e-book.

Nurses, and long term care nurses in particular, will find inspiration and enjoyment in reading this book. Through the sharing of her personal experiences, occasionally with a touch of humor, Lansing shares the message that the long term care nurse can find a love for her job by focusing on making life better for residents and by caring for one's self. Her tips on dealing with patients suffering from Alzheimer's are particularly helpful.

This book was written by a woman who was a nurse in a nursing home for many years and her experience shows. It left me with great tips and things to reflect on concerning care giving with the elderly.

The sensitive yet down-to-earth approaches described and suggested in this short book have potential to reassure those who might be uneasy on having to interact with nursing home issues. It's carefully written and nicely laid out. The author's dedication and personal involvement lends it added authority.
