So begins Russell McGilton's ten-month cycling journey through bustling cities and remote villages of India, Pakistan and China, where he encounters and is embraced by fascinating locals and fellow travellers.

I loved this book! It's a 'warts and all' exploration of India, China, Pakistan, Tibet, Nepal. There are exciting and fun times, beautifully conjured atmosphere through tight and textured writing, and quiet moments of frustration, fear and despair. For lovers of journeys - both inner and outer.

This is a brilliant read about a man's journey through some of the most populous & misunderstood countries on earth. His biking adventures achievements are understated & often hilarious!

Bombay to Beijing by Bicycle is just as entertaining as the title (and cover) suggest! Russell McGilton's crazy adventure sees him getting into all sorts of trouble along the way and his writing style is extremely good - funny, witty, but he doesn't hold back from describing the tough things he experiences either. Personally I'm an armchair adventurer so I'm glad that people like Russell are out there having these adventures for me!
